In most good ones, there's a warm afterglow of emotions and contemplation reminiscent of the finest psychotropics. Shutting off a Porsche 911 GT3's flat-six leaves you suspended in silence, a brief respite before the stale adrenaline and paranoia hit. Was that a police car behind me? No way of knowing since the GT3's spoiler hides anything in your rear view. A man's will melts when faced with a naturally aspirated 500-hp 4.0-liter flat-six that burns its way to 9000 rpm. The new-for-2018 GT3's engine features wider crankshaft bearings to beef up the bottom end and new heads with roller finger followers for a lighter and zingier valvetrain. In higher gears, where the stretch from 8000 to 9000 rpm grows to more than a fraction of a second, the churn of its six pistons exactly mimics the characteristic buzz-saw sound of an Airbus A320's turbofan engines at takeoff. In the GT3, you're immersed in 99 decibels' worth of thrust with every run to redline.
